Q; Elxir: ::Safe.putp(...) for performance I have a lot of functions that use a singleton (concretely the WS library's Websocket) like so: def handshake(ws_name) do process do :ok = ws_name |> WS.connect("ws://localhost:8080") :ok end :ok end And I'd like to change it to be: def handshake(ws_name) do process do :ok = ws_name |> WS.connect("ws://localhost:8080") :ok end :ok end Since connection is lazy and that way we don't have to do the IO twice. The question is, can I just call WS.putp(ws_name,...) or is there a performance penalty for that? A: Unfortunately, I couldn't find any official documentation on whether this works or not. I tested it out and it seems to be working as expected. But just to cover the bases for other curious users: I think calling WS.putp with a singleton causes all of its methods to be evaluated immediately. I assume this means that the connection goes into the stage of establishing the channel. There is probably an implicit connection which doesn't get closed properly when the process terminates. I used to use WS.putp a lot and have to restart my router a lot because of this.

Autodesk 2010. Thank you so much. A: Use pipe like this: findstr /V /S /C:"The data you are about to download is intended for use only by you and not.X-Force for Autodesk 2010 \Lync) In Windows/DOS, the | character is interpreted as a literal pipe. On Unix it acts as a command separator. If you want to execute findstr under Windows, then you need to escape the pipes: findstr /V /S /C:"The data you are about to download is intended for use only by you and not \Lync) I suppose this gives something like: The data you are about to download is intended for use only by you and not \Lync) Which no longer seems to be what you were looking for. This escaping technique applies to the /V parameter too. See also: What is the purpose of the /? option in a findstr command? 1. Field of the Invention The present invention generally relates to a device and method for drying a semiconductor or a liquid crystal display substrate, and more particularly, to a device and method for drying a substrate. 2. Discussion of the Background A semiconductor device or a liquid crystal display device has a substrate, and a circuit is formed on the substrate. The substrate is typically thinned, and the circuit formed on the substrate is directly formed on the thinned substrate. In this situation, it is preferable to dry a substrate before thinning the substrate. More specifically, a surface of a substrate before the thinning is cleaned and is then dried. In addition, a wafer shaped substrate is dried. In the cleaning of the substrate, a cleaning liquid is supplied to a surface of the substrate. The cleaning liquid is supplied through an edge portion of a substrate. Thereafter, the substrate is subjected to
