High-dose therapy with stem cell support is the major therapeutic option for patients with advanced breast cancer. However, the frequency of treatment-related complications following high-dose therapy is significant, ranging from 25-50%. Success of autologous stem cell transplantation depends on the availability of suitable donors for marrow, the performance of a durable procedure and the achievement of adequate disease control prior to the procedure. Recent clinical trials have suggested the use of factors involved in the mobilization of hematopoietic stem cells as a successful strategy for autologous stem cell support. Thrombopoietin (TPO) is a molecule that interacts with the TPO receptor (c-mpl), which is expressed on the surface of hematopoietic stem cells, megakaryocytes, and platelets. A soluble form of the c-mpl is generated by proteolytic cleavage of the membrane-bound c-mpl. This article summarizes the recent developments related to TPO and TPO receptor, providing insights into the nature of TPO-TPO receptor system and its function. The biological action of TPO, the principle of TPO-TPO receptor system, and the preliminary results of clinical application are also discussed. Treatment of precordial ST-elevation myocardial infarction with thrombolysis: high mortality and in-hospital and long-term outcome of TIMI 0-2 patients versus TIMI 3-4 patients. Our purpose was to compare long-term outcome of ST-elevation myocardial infarction (STEMI) patients treated with thrombolytic therapy who presented with shock, cardiogenic shock, and no-reflow as assessed by thrombolysis in myocardial infarction (TIMI) flow. A total of 1130 STEMI patients admitted to Thrombolysis in Myocardial Infarction trial were randomly assigned to primary percutaneous coronary intervention (PPCI) or thrombolysis groups. The TIMI flow was evaluated in the first 30 minutes after thrombolysis. We selected patients who presented with
